MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY

In 1884 a proposal was made by John Waddington to construct a railway line from York to Geraldton via Newcastle [now Toodyay] and Northam under the land grant system. This was referred to a select committee of the Legislative Council. 12 September this committee advised that the line should begin at Guildford. The Colonial Secretary informed John Waddington of London that Governor Broome was ready to enter into agreement for the construction of the railway. A syndicate was formed in London and a contract was entered into in February 1886.

Payment was in the form of a land grant of 12,000 acres for every mile of railway completed, in sections of 20 miles. As soon as each section was completed the contractor was to select his land within a distance of 40 miles of the railway, and frontage was not to be less than five miles and a minimum depth of 15 miles.

Construction took 8 years, with continual problems, most of which related to lack of finance; this halted construction from 1887 to 1890. The line was finished in November 1894.

During its history the Midland Railway Company encountered many problems mainly of a financial nature. The company in 1963 owned 711 items of rolling stock inclusive of locomotives and road coaches and also employed a total staff of 427 people.

The W.A. Government made an offer to take over the company with a payment over 25 years which was accepted by the shareholders and took effect on 1 August 1964

The Papers

The papers (1557A) were transferred to the Battye Library from the local office of the Midland Railway Company, Perth in July 1967. Some papers were also received from the R & I Bank, W.A. Government Railways and the Official Receiver in Perth.

(Acc 1558A) records were transferred to the Battye Library by the Rural and Industries Bank in October 1967. These records appear to have been held by the Company Auditors – Ford Rhodes and Foulkes
