ABROLHOS GUANO.

THE Government Surveyor having handed us sealed duplicates of 22 representative samples of ABROLHOS GUANO taken by him, we forwarded same to MR. JOHN HUGHES, Agricultural Analyst, of 79 Mark Lane, London, E.C., for examination and report. The following is a typical analysis by this well-known authority:—

Water (lost at 212 deg. Fah.)	9'60
Organic matter and combined water	18'80
*Phosphoric Acid	26'65
Lime	34'66
†Carbonic Acid	1'10
Oxides of iron, alumina, alkalies, magnesia, etc.	7'73
Sand	1'46

*Equal to phosphate of Lime

†Equal to carbonate of Lime

(Sample sealed, A. J. WELLS, Licensed Surveyor)

Mr. Hughes goes on to say:—"The agricultural value of ABROLHOS GUANO is now well recognised, and depends upon its richness in phosphate of lime, which, though not soluble in water, is, I find, gradually dissolved by vegetable acids, such as citric acid. Consequently on rich vegetable or peaty soils this guano can be used as it is (without any chemical treatment) with advantage as manure for root crops; also, upon grass lands deficient in lime and where the quality of the herbage is coarse and rank, and, therefore, not at present of much use either for cattle or sheep. The effect of this guano on such grass land will be found very beneficial, as it will improve and increase the growth of the finer grasses."

(Signed), JOHN HUGHES,
 Fellow of the Inst. of Chemistry; Member of the Society of Public Analysts; consulting
 Chemist to the Ceylon Coffee Planters' Assoc.; Dist. Agricultural Analyst for Herefordshire.

We may add that the mean results of the whole 22 samples were 58.7 per cent. of phosphate of lime. When phosphatic manures are required, it has been proved that ABROLHOS GUANO will give results equal to the best bone dusts and on a par with most phosphatic fertilisers.
